AMUSEMENTS.

Mary Anderson as "Parthenia." Last might there was another large and critical audience at the Memphis theater to witness Miss Mary Anderson as "Parthenia" in that thrillingly romantic play entitled In-gomar, the Barbarian, the title role of which was sustained with effect by Mr. John Norton, an actor favorably known to the amusement-loving people of this city. While "Ingomar" is properly the more conspicuous figure in the play, the great interest was centered in "Parthenia," as its portrayal was committed to the talent southern star, Miss Anderson. We ad looked forward to a refined, careful and graceful rendition of this character, embodying, as it does, the elements of the most brilliant and elevating qualities. To express these is the great end and, we can say, the grand effect of the role. That Miss Anderson realized public expectation, and even satisfied the critical mind, we can well admit. Throughout the play there was an equable, consistent smoothness, both natural and impressive. Despite the contrariety of the mountings—the view of Grecian hall, with neighboring house of paneled doors and four-paned window of red curtain, on which the royal taxgatherer had doubtless hoarded many penny, and the exceptionally bad support, Miss Anderson's acting was thorough, and, to our mind, most fascinating. Her "Parthenia" is certainly ingenious, reasonable and in the highest manner effective, In the character she may be said to have but one brilliant scene, but that is the whole. A resume of the character of "Parthenia," as portrayed by Miss Anderson, will incline one to accord her all the generous comprehension, the skillful execution, and the grace ful style of act, look and figure which good taste and intellectual excellence demand. We sum up our opinion of Miss Mary Anderson's "Parthenia"—a captivating simplicity seems to prompt each thought, and a spontaneous loveliness crown ev-ery effort. Her "Parthenia" charms and wins; it is beautiful in conception, intense in its calmness and natural in ex-ecution. We must congratulate Miss Anderson upon her triumph last night, as was suffi-ciently testified by the expressive encores and floral tributes bestowed. This evening she will appear in Romeo and Juliet, and of course will draw a full house.

With this view I herewith submit that certain changes and repeals of existing pro-visions of the charter shall be made. We should, however, be slow to innovate upon organic law, especially if almost untried, un-less their defects are plainly seen. This compromise necessitates a repeal of that clause of 2.612 19

The payment of taxes is a public duy—a duty to be voluntarily discharged, rather than to be studiously avoided. Those who pay cannot object to a more rigid law, and the objection of these who do not, as now, there is a gross inequality in the burdens imposed. Now, all lingly.
